MAIN BUILDING

The Soul of Peace

There is something of Peace which will never die,
Which is invisible, permanent, old;
Which is always changing, yet always the same,
As the pages of time unfold,
Some call it the "spirit" each new year creates,
As new girls replace the old;
Or the "atmosphere," which affects each one,
And all the girls as a whole;
But I call it something which means even more;
I call it Peace's soul.

SIDE VIEW OF MAIN BUILDING

Ivy of Peace

Ivy of dear Peace, growing steadily,

Of every life thou art a part;

Thy tendrils, as they grow through all the years,

Reach out, and twine 'round every school-girl's heart.

Traditions, memories of the long ago,

Hopes each departing class has planted with thee,

Have found expression in thy perfect growth,

And stand, developed, for the world to see.

Editors' Plea

Each had her own work to do—
Drawing, planning, and writing too,
It has taken us long, we've sat up late,
To give you a book, and mark the fate
Of our Seniors, soon out in the World to go,
Rich or poor, high or low,
It may not be as it might have been, but
All things come to some kind of an end,
Let it stay, we've done our best.

Sleepy we've been,
Tired, too;
Ads we've got
For this book, for you,
Free are we from care; at last

HERE'S YOUR BOOK!

We hope it will pass.

Peggy is one of those rare individuals who can handle any situation that presents itself. She is what one would call a well-rounded girl; she plays basketball with vim and enthusiasm, she is seldom found without an efficient answer in class, and she has proved herself thoroughly capable as Business Manager of the Lotus.

In Sprunt we have a faithful friend and a wise and conscientious president. She can be either dignified or otherwise as the occasion demands. We can always depend on her sound judgment and practical ability. For this she commands our love and respect, and we see success for her in whatever she may undertake in the future.

"Life is not so short but that there is time for courtesy."

Norma always has so many things to do that we often wonder how she accomplishes them all and still has time for fun. After careful deliberation we have decided that it is because she doesn't waste time talking—she acts. And no doubt her "bit o' blarney" helps her too. Norma loves to help folks, and especially likes to take us in hand when we are blue and home-sick. As president of our Y. W. C. *"Valuable things come in small

According to Miss Ingraham, Isabel is the "common sense" member of the Senior English class. And that isn't all. She has a mind of her own and a will quite out of proportion to her size. Isabel intends to teach and, although we suspect that she may be mistaken for one of her pupils, we know she will make a success of it. Why are we so sure? Well, for one thing, there's her common sense, and for another, she's Scotch, you know.

"There's mischief lurking in her very eyes."

Mary is a mixture of fun and seriousness. She takes life as it comes and still manages to leave the impression of dependability and capability. We hardly know whether to prophesy that she will be a professor in some university or a famous movie star. You never can tell about Booker T., you know.

Life must hold something big in store for Ruth with her quiet ability for making friends everywhere she goes.

Martha possesses the happy faculty of knowing exactly the right thing to say at the right time, and this as much as any thing else has helped her make her numerous friends. Speaking of capability, well that's Rachel all over. She can do anything she wants to, from giving recitals to making the Annual a success. And when it comes to mischief—that's her middle name. Mr. Brawley fully expects her to be a second Beethoven and we know she will be.

Senior Poem

In a land of mirth and sunshine,
    Stands the school we love
Above all others of the land,
    Bright as stars above
Are our hopes for her dear future;
    Ever may she stand
"In the heart of Carolina,"
    The best state of the land!

Long we've worked and played and studied,
    Through many a happy year,
In every crevice, nook and corner
    Lie old memories dear,
    That hold us with soft, clinging fingers,
    "Stay!" they seem to say
"And be a school girl all your life,
    Don't ever go away!"

But all the world is calling;
    We're needed in the strife,
    Though we hate to leave our school mates,
Each must live her life,
    To Peace will come new daughters
    Better far than we,
Yet we'll ever love and cherish
    Dreams, dear Peace, of thee.

There's a little song of parting,
    Scotchmen love to sing,
    I'll sing it now to thee, Peace;
    Let the echoes ring,
"Farewell, farewell!" has a mournful sound,
    And always brings a sigh;
So give to us that better word,
    That sweet old word, "Goodbye."

LILY WINN, Poet.

Senior Class History

TRADITION and custom teach us that every important period of time should be recorded, and if the four year college course is not an important period in a girl's life, what is? It is, therefore, the Historian's privilege to place on record an account of the class of 1922, its progress and achievements, and the events which have been of interest to the class.

September 7, 1918, stands out preeminently to this graduating class, for it was on that day, four years ago, although it seems hardly the same number of months ago, that Peace opened her gates to twelve verdant Freshmen. Although the Armistice had been signed, war was continually waged against us by the Sophomores, whose duty it was to acquaint us with the mysteries of college life. This they did by taking us through an informal ceremony known as Initiation. We survived the ordeal but came out with the required number of scratches. Soon we became confident of our ability to overcome all obstacles, and entered into the college activities with the enthusiasm and pep of Freshmen. We later had cause to wonder just how Peace had been maintained in former years without us.

In the fall of 1919, eight of our number returned to welcome thirty-two new members. This was one of the largest Sophomore classes in the history of the school. We did not altogether ignore the Freshmen and it took us some time to get them adjusted to their proper stations. The most outstanding event during the year was a party given us by the Senior class. At this party the Seniors gave us their privileges for one whole day. These consisted of signing up and going down town, and having a date on a regular school night.

The fall of 1920 brought sixteen Jolly Juniors back to Peace. Here we received the privilege of chaperoning the underclassmen, and the responsibility was indeed overwhelming! Now it was no longer necessary to hang over the rail and watch the proceedings of the Junior-Senior Reception, but we actually were the hostesses, and how we did shine! Another occasion which we shall never forget was a dinner party given in our honor by Angelia Morrison, our class mascot.

Commencement Class Day exercises brought the final triumph when we received our ribbons from the Seniors, assuring us that we had reached that place which we had been working to attain for three years.

In September, 1921, twelve, our original round dozen number, returned for the final struggle with Psych, English, and the Kings of Israel.

Our Senior year has been all that we could hope for. We shall never forget the Virginia-Carolina foot-ball game at Chapel Hill, the lovely reception given us by the Juniors, the Sophomore Valentine party, and the many "get-together" feasts with Miss Burwell, our class teacher.

As Commencement Day draws near, we are filled with regret at the thought of leaving the friends we have made. And we are thinking not only of these friendships, but also of Peace itself, with its many happy associations. We feel that what we have learned has been an important factor in forming our ideals and determining our aspirations.

Our exit now may be compared to a ship's leaving harbor. One by one the tugs are leaving us and we shall soon be out on the uncertain sea of life, but in our cargo we are carrying tons of the sweetest of memories and good wishes for Peace.

ELIZABETH GIBSON,
Historian.

Last Will and Testament

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA }
 COUNTY OF WAKE } Peace Institute.
 CITY OF RALEIGH }

We, the class of 1922, of the aforesaid state, county, city, and college, realizing that soon, with diplomas in our hands and Peace in our hearts, we shall go forth, never to return; and being in the possession of certain property and effects of which we wish to dispose, do draw up this document.

Therefore, know ye that we, the aforesaid class, being of sound minds, liberal dispositions, and excellent memories and understandings, do hereby make known our last will and testament. It is in manner and form as follows:

ITEM I

To Miss Graham, our President, we will our faith, love, and loyalty, throughout the coming years.

ITEM II

To Miss McLelland:

(1) A Senior class, and a Student Council, that will be a perfect example to the whole school.

(2) A Student Body, each member the proud possessor of high shoes, spats, wool hose, raincoat, umbrella, and over-shoes; with the guarantee of at least six deep snows in the winter of 1922-23.

(3) A Miss Rudy for Mondays, Fair week and Thanksgiving, instead of only for occasional week-ends.

(4) A Bible paper, with a perfect discourse of at least forty pages on David.

ITEM III

To Miss Burwell, our beloved class teacher, we will the sincere love and devotion of each member of her class.

ITEM IV

To the class of 1923:

(1) In the vault in Miss Kirkpatrick's office, a neat little package labeled, "Handle with care." These, dear Juniors, are our privileges. They have been gained through years of hard labor and suffering, and it would hurt us to see them abused. In one corner of this box there will be found the rare, but truly delightful privilege of attending basket-ball games during the week,—especially the Carolina-State, and Davidson-State games. In another corner will be found the much-sought-after privilege of having suitors any night in the week. In the third corner of this dainty package, there is a roll of advice, which, dear friends, it may be advantageous for you to heed. And what is in the fourth corner?—Juniors, we left this open that you may fill it with some new Special Senior Privilege.

(2) Lastly to the Juniors we will our dignity, our virtues, our titles of respect, and our ideals, for their Senior year.

ITEM V

To the class of 1924:

- (1) The privilege of attending the Junior-Senior reception.
- (2) The privilege of chaperoning girls down town, and playing the part of big sisters.
- (3) The joys of initiation!

ITEM VI

To the class of 1925:

- (1) The hope of some day going out into the world as we are about to go, on condition that you have done as well in your work as we have in ours.
- (2) To these fresh young minds we magnanimously bequeath the salt of our intellectual powers, hoping that it will keep them, until a ripe old age, from succumbing to the fatal dart of Cupid.

ITEM VII

To the underclassmen:

- (1) The hope that next year the famous nine minuses for skipping study hall, may be reduced to at most five.
- (2) That Miss Eichelberger may forget when Wednesday comes.

ITEM VIII

To Miss Becker:

- (1) Our sincere thanks and appreciation for the patience and interest she has manifested towards us, throughout our Senior year.

- (2) A State Library all her own.

To Mrs. Moore:

- (1) A gardener for the Studio Garden.

To Mrs. Fowler:

- (1) A canary bird that will sing.

To Miss Kirkpatrick:

- (1) A season ticket to all basket-ball, baseball, and foot-ball games in the State of North Carolina.

To Mrs. Webber:

- (1) A choral class composed of twenty-five splendid sopranos, and fifty rumbling contraltos.

To Mrs. McLelland:

- (1) A secretary, who will keep strict account of every body who goes out and comes in, where they are going, what for, and when they expect to return.

ITEM IX

As Residuary Legatee, we name Elizabeth Croom, to execute this our Last Will and Testament and every part of the clauses thereof, hereby revoking and declaring void all other wills and testaments made by us.

In witness, whereof, we, the said class of 1922, do hereby set our seal and signature, on this the thirtieth day of May in the year of our Lord, One Thousand and Nine Hundred and Twenty-two, Peace Institute, Raleigh, North Carolina.

(Signed) CLASS OF 1922.

MARTHA FAIRLEY, Lawyer.

Senior Class Prophecy

The afternoon was lovely. The setting sun illuminated the heavens with shades of pale rose and gold, and made a beautiful background for the stately old oaks of the Peace campus. A gentle breeze brought the fresh fragrance of newly mown grass and spring flowers, reminding one that spring had come in all her glory.

This nature smiled on the Seniors of '22 as we dashed out on the campus, swinging baskets of lunch, chattering, teasing, and bubbling over with fun and enthusiasm over the last sunset and moonlight picnic at our favorite haunt, Mordecai Springs.

A brisk walk soon carried us to the springs, and once there, in the same happy, carefree, manner we set about building our bonfire to roast bacon. Fun and merriment, supplemented by a strange sadness because we knew that this was our last frolic of the sort, made the supper pass all too quickly, and before, I realized it we were circled around the bonfire with joined hands, singing our Alma Mater.

With my thoughts bent upon this circle, bound together by the very song we were singing, and bent too on the separation that must come within two weeks' time, my mind was suddenly set adrift out over the days, months, years, that were to follow, and I began to ponder the future of these class-mates of mine.

Busy with such thoughts, I unconsciously strolled away from the crowd, and finding a tiny bubbling stream a little way off, I sat down, and there, in the hush of the twilight, facing the big, rising moon, I resumed my strange thoughts. I gazed at the little stream, and lo! even as I looked it grew wider and wider. I was filled with bewilderment; and then a delicious stupidity seemed to possess me. When the stream had grown to such an extent that I could no longer see the other side, a white mist covered it. Then the mist quickly cleared away and a figure became distinguishable, a beautiful fairy. Her appearance reassured me, for the sight of the broad expanse of water had mystified me exceedingly. She waved a slender, jeweled wand above her head and spoke to me in the most wonderful voice I have ever heard.

"My child, you are sitting beside the stream of life. Until now it has been narrow, but at last it has widened for you and your classmates. Soon you will be in its midst with its foaming waves around you, and with many a stormy and many a sunshiny day to encounter. You are now wondering what the future holds in store for your dear class-mates." She gracefully circled her wand over her head and was gone.

What was this I saw? The bright lights dazzled me! I was gazing upon the interior of a large auditorium filled with well-dressed, intelligent-looking women. My gaze wandered down the aisle to a rostrum upon which were a massive table and some handsome chairs. Behind the table stood Margaret Sprunt Hall, our beloved Student Body President, still exercising her power to command, and with gavel in hand, calling the huge assembly to order. A voice near me whispered that this was the President of the National Federation of Women's Clubs.

The scene changed immediately, and I saw the rear of a great colonial farm house. Its aristocratic appearance assured me that true southern hospitality was to be found within. On a large, cool back porch sat a handsome young woman charming. She was intent upon her work, but finally she raised her head and I recognized Margaret Jenkins. Yes, Peggy, our Senior Class President! The day of miracles is not past!

I had only to shut my eyes and open them in another country. What a secluded looking spot! No, it was a native settlement in China, and there is a mission school in the distance. Seated in the doorway, whom did I see but Norma Connell, surrounded by a crowd of native children.

I looked again and saw Martha Fairley in a richly furnished boudoir, facing a full length reflection of her still beautiful self, and holding between her hands a string, from which were suspended the usual dozen frat pins and six diamond rings.

The whirl of an auto motor quickly attracted my attention, and I saw a Chandler Speedster race down a beautiful country road, turn into a lovely drive, and stop before an attractive white bungalow almost covered with pink rambler roses. A big, handsome man stepped from the car and greeted a pretty young woman whom I recognized as Lucile Howard, our quiet, unassuming Cile of Peace, seated in a big porch swing, reading to two adorable children.

Another change of scene and I saw before me a great audience completely held and swayed by the melodious strains of an old violin. As I watched, the dainty, gracefully poised figure with the instrument at her chin, became more distinct, and I found that this was really and truly Ruth Brinkley. She had won renown by her marvelous technique and sweetness of tone.

The scene darkened and I gazed with wonder upon my surroundings. Before me was a dimly-lighted drawing room with massive furniture, elegant dark draperies, which shut out most of the light, and soft Persian rugs. In the soft rays of a rose shaded lamp, I saw two figures: one rather small, leaning over a desk and intently writing; the other with her head held haughtily in the air while she spoke in slow deliberate tones. I had surely heard that voice somewhere, and there was something familiar also about the other figure bent over the desk. I listened and came to the conclusion that the smaller of the two must be taking dictation. My glance then rested on a book on the table and I started as I recognized the name of the author—Lily Winn. Again I turned my attention to the little figure at the desk. Yes, it was Isabel Barkley, secretary to Lily Winn, the world famous author.

But what about Elizabeth Gibson, Mary Booker, and Nellie Russell?

No sooner had I thought than I saw a dainty blonde behind a teacher's desk in a class room of a university, which I surmised to be Columbia. I beheld Libber who was now M. E. Gibson, Ph.B., Ph.M. I might well have expected this of Libber with her psychological mind and genius.

It was strange that I simply had to think of the name of one of my classmates and immediately her future was revealed. My head seemed to reel, and I could scarcely make out the scene before me. At last I became aware of a room decorated with many brightly trimmed hats. Indeed, there seemed to be no end of them. There were all sizes, shapes, and colors, so that the room looked like a crazy quilt. As I looked, a stately figure in black velvet crossed the room and surveyed the display with satisfaction. Could this be Mary Booker? It was, surely. I turned and read the sign at the entrance of the shop: "Madame Booker, Fifth Avenue's First Milliner." So here was Booker T., my old class-mate, fascinating the world with her stylish models, and setting the fashion for New York's hats.

The scene lightened until I gazed upon a spotless, white-tiled kitchen where Nellie Russell was painstakingly measuring the flour for a cake. The sun shone in through the windows and showed me plainly that there was not a speck of dirt to be found, from the shiny stove to the spotless white sink. Here indeed was Nellie in all her glory, revelling in neatness and systematic order, and putting into practice the art she had learned at Peace. As I watched, she gave the flour sifter a last firm shake and called to someone in the adjoining room.

But what was that terrible pain in my shoulder? It was as if someone were shaking the very life out of me.

"Rachel! Rachel! are you going to sleep all night? You've had us all scared to death! We couldn't find you. Come on! we're the last ones now."

"Why, 'Cile, is that you? Have I been only asleep? I think I have been very much awake. I have seen the future of my class-mates."

Shivering in the damp, chill air of the evening, I looked up and saw the moon, now swinging high in the heavens. The whole earth seemed to be flooded with its silver light. The same tiny stream was trickling at my feet. Still dazed and not quite realizing what had happened to me, I made my way to a laughing group at the top of the hill.

RACHEL GRADY, Prophet.

THE SENIOR CLASS

Poem

We entered Peace as Freshmen green,
Intent on obtaining a schoolin',
Of studying hard we didn't dream,
Not to mention all this rulin'.

Soon we got used to all these things,
And could hardly believe our eyes,
When finals were passed and Commencement came
And we donned the title of "Sophomores Wise."

Being possessed of minds far superior
To those of all classes preceding,
We filled our place unusually well,
And never had doubt of succeeding.

Succeed we did, and all was well,
For, when Commencement came in May,
We took our exams, and passed them all
In the easiest kind of way.

Once more we come, and once more is ours
The success for which we've toiled;
As Juniors we've been happy girls
And nothing our pleasure has spoiled.

So now for a toast, let's give it with vim,
To a class from care so free!
May our cup be happiness, full to the brim—
The Juniors of Peace, '23!

We've thrown away green glasses,
For Sophomores are we.
We've entered higher classes;
We're smart as smart can be.

Twenty-three in number,
We toil to make a rep.
The Sophomores do not slumber;
We're a class chock full of pep.

So here's to the dearest class of all!
To the highest heights may she soar!
May she always answer duty's call,
Hail! class of twenty-four!

SCENE FROM PLAY "THREE PILLS IN A BOTTLE"

WREATH DANCE FROM MAY DAY PAGEANT

SCENES FROM MAY DAY PAGEANT

It's a feeling—a sort of achy feeling—that settles all around your heart. It grips it tight and makes it beat and throb. Caught unawares, you jump and blush, and your heart seems stuck where it shouldn't be, so that you stammer and say, "I don't know." It's a funny feeling, a sort of left-out feeling, that makes you think you have no friends, and then you soothe and pet and coddle that feeling until you cry, "It isn't fair!" You lie awake and think hard, hateful thoughts; you make dark plans that wouldn't do to tell, and in the morning you are so cross and fussy, that your room-mate leaves you and slams the door behind her. At breakfast the bacon looks horrid, the grits are burned, and the coffee tastes bitter, so that you push it all aside and, with a very superior and mysterious air, ask to be excused.

You walk in a hazy sort of way from class to class, indifferent to everything that happens, and generally bored with the world. That feeling grips you again, in the evening, when you look out at the moon, and then you sigh, because there is nothing else to do. All through the day you have reminded yourself that your heart is broken, and then when you see the moon you know it is, for that queer feeling holds you to it and makes you look sad-eyed and droopy-mouthed. With a swift movement you turn from the window, and, catching sight of a box of candy and a book, shrug your shoulders and dive in among the pillows and candy. An hour passes, and glancing up, your eye falls upon a crumpled letter, lying innocently near—and you wonder. Then it all comes back in a flash—

To Old North State

To live in such a country
Of jessamine and pine,
To see the sparkling waters
Of dear old Caroline,
Is the only thing I think of
When I am far away,
And oh, the longing heartaches
That fill my heart each day.

I love you, Carolina,
With your sunny skies so bright,
From your burning sands and seacoast
To your lofty mountain heights,
No matter where I wander
O'er mountain, plain, or sea,
My heart will be returning
To my old beloved N. C.

A Tragedy in One Act

TIME: Last meeting of Lotus staff. PLACE: Room 200. CHARACTERS: Lotus Staff.

Discovered—Editor-in-Chief and Business Manager bent over table covered with writing materials.

BUSINESS MANAGER: "I'd rather give people Annuals than figure out pennies, pennies, pennies!"

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: "Stick your head out of the door and call the rest of the staff. We've got to finish tonight if we stay up until 2 P. X.

BUSINESS MANAGER (Drags to door and opens quickly—yells wildly): "Annual meeting; come on!"

Eight associate editors slump in, rubbing eyes.

FIRST A. E.: "Do hurry! I've got to get up early and play tennis."

SECOND A. E.: "Heavens, have we got to copy? I forgot my pen!"

THIRD A. E.: "When will this Annual go to press? I'm sick of looking at it."

FOURTH A. E.: "Let's throw away that old pile of material; I never saw such junk."

FIFTH A. E.: "Why don't people say witty things! There aren't any good jokes."

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: "Shut up and get to work!"

Everyone grabs chairs and paper and begins writing. Silence for four minutes.

THIRD A. E.: "If I don't get a letter from Jim, I won't live till morn."

SECOND A. E.: "Well, Willie sends one every night."

BUSINESS MANAGER: "Do hush! If you had all this money to figure out—The only mail I'm interested in is checks to cancel these bills."

Silence for ten minutes.

FIRST A. E.: "I've broken my pen. Let's talk."

FIFTH A. E.: "If you do, say something we can use for a joke."

SEVENTH A. E.: "I feel funny—" (Keels over—others rush around her. They all fall down except the Business Manager, who telephones for Doctor.)

Doctor and nurse enter.

NURSE (examining patients): "Fit subjects for Dix Hill."

DOCTOR: "No—only Annualitis caused by workitis and criticitis."
